

The current market of relay providers is very limited and the FCC should allow other phone companies, like Snap Telecommunications, to provide relay services.